2.2.3 Institution facilitates building and sustenance of innate talent /aptitude of individual students (extramural activities/beyond the classroom activities such as student clubs, cultural societies, etc)

Response:

Through its numerous yearly extracurricular programmes, Dr. Ulhas Patil Homoeopathic Medical College and Hospital, Jalgaon Kh. works hard to support and develop each student's innate abilities in a variety of areas, including sports, applied arts, literary skills, leadership, and teamwork.

In addition to providing the natural abilities with monetary and technical assistance, the organization also takes into account the development of the aptitude of worthy students by offering trainers, coaches, and facilitators for a range of activities that assist in tutoring, guiding, and grooming the students for the aforementioned elements through the following events, programmes, and activities.

Every year, the college hosts a sports week where students compete in sports like volleyball, throw ball, cricket, and athletics.

College's cultural events comprises of group & solo dance, singing, mimicry, theatre with orchestra and choreographer. To respect the diverse states' varied cultures, folk values, and customs, traditional dances and remixes are performed. Granting students health, grace, agility, goodness of the soul, and mental harmony in the process.

Seminars on personality development are held to help students improve their soft skills. Students are given opportunities to paint on walls, make rangolis to represent the rich culture of Maharashtra and to welcome optimism and festivity on occasions like Teachers' Day, Hahnemann Day, national days, and cultural gatherings.

Through the use of the workshop and literature, students acquire a spiritual dimension. Facilitating new learning is achieved through organizing conferences, seminars, workshops, and talks by specialists on current advancements.

Our students become more health conscious as a result of World TB Day, AIDS Day, Yoga Day, and WHO Day celebrations.

Students are urged to engage in blood donation camps. It encourages students to perform such life-saving deeds and helps them cultivate a generous mentality. The college uses NSS to organize medical camps and awareness campaigns in an effort to develop the socio-cultural talents of its students. Students' aptitude for environmental protection is encouraged by tree planting activities during the monsoon season, which also fosters relationships with the community and case receiving ability. Students participate universally in the tree-planting exercise even though it is optional.

Project-based learning helps students develop their creativity and natural aptitude, particularly when it comes to preparing for their Herbarium Project in the Homoeopathic Pharmacy course.

At every level, students are developed with a positive learning attitude, hidden potential, and leadership skills through student councils and decision-making partnerships.

The institute additionally aids in the development of research aptitude by offering possibilities for interns to take part in STSH (Short Term Research Projects) and by assigning them a required research project to complete during their internship.

This encapsulates the ways in which DUPHMC facilitates the development of students' artistic, cultural, and spiritual aspects in order to enable them to become the best versions of themselves.
